Consent for Research Participation

Zoo Atlanta is a “Research Zoo”, meaning that we regularly perform research studies of our animals, both at the Zoo and in the wild. In addition, the Zoo performs research that focuses on guest impact, perceptions and educational program outcomes. All these research projects are part of how the Zoo measures their impact and progress in achieving the mission to protect wildlife and wild places. Specifically, in our Education Department, the Zoo is evaluating program impact on our participants as well as working with a team of psychologists from Zoo Atlanta and Duke University who study how children learn to make decisions.

Your student is being invited to contribute to these research projects. Information will be collected as part of the program, using surveys and games. This information will be used for program improvement, and to assess student learning and interest. We would like your permission to use your child’s responses as part of this in research about the program, which may be published. It is important that you know that reporting is done in the aggregate and no individual information is shared. Participant’s identity is confidential and anonymized by program staff. After analysis, the surveys are stored in a secure location and will be destroyed within one year of the completion of the program. Participation in these surveys is voluntary, and should you elect to not partake in this portion of the program it will not affect any other activities during the program.

If you have any questions in relation to the program, please contact Michelle Kolar, Vice President of Education at Zoo Atlanta, mkolar@zooatlanta.org

For specific questions about the research team please contact Aleah Bowie (aleah.bowie@duke.edu).

If you have questions about participants’ rights in these studies, contact Duke’s research review committee at ors-info@duke.edu.
